Checklist for Success in 2016
By Cheryl L. Stengel, Esq.

For most people, it’s traditional to look back on the previous year seeking hints as to how to improve and thrive in the year to come. Common wisdom tells us it’s beneficial to begin the New Year on a positive note, but that doesn’t mean one shouldn’t be realistic as well. In this day and age, one needs to move forward with eyes wide open, especially members of the legal profession.

The economic recession continues to impact the middle class, which comprises the primary market of most small law firms. Legal services and forms offered by online providers have also cut into our traditional business model and encourage many of our potential clients to “do it themselves” rather than hire us. Meanwhile, technology continues to take over many routine functions.

There is intense pressure on lawyers to adapt quickly or perish. So, while you’re considering your options to morph your practice and avoid obsolescence, consider the following suggestions:

- Put up a simple website to brand you and your firm. This can be done easily and for modest cost.
- Create LinkedIn and Facebook accounts for your law firm and keep the information updated with your professional organizations and activities.
- Add your firm information and biography to online attorney directories, such as AVVO and the Foothills Bar Association.
- Have a professional photo taken to include on the on-line attorney listing directories and your website.
- Be willing to adapt your practice to emerging technologies.
- Write and publish a law-related article. Brag about it – send it to your clients and post it on-line on your LinkedIn and Facebook accounts and your website. The Foothills Bar Association is pleased to publish member contributions on relevant topics in its newsletter.
- Maintain a current curriculum vitae. You never know when a prospective client or organization may ask for this.
- Join a new professional organization.
- Look for an opportunity to speak at an MCLE program on your area of expertise. The Foothills Bar Association’s section chairs are always looking for program speakers on various legal topics.
- Make time for regular exercise and hobbies!

Wishing you an exciting and prosperous New Year!
